

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Overseas demand drives expansion of UK Security Expo

[LONDON 01 MARCH 2018] UK Security Expo run by Nineteen Events, will undergo a major expansion in 2018 due to increased demand from overseas companies and now becomes the International Security Expo.

With over 12,500 visitors and 350 exhibitors expected on November 28-29 in London, an increase of 38% on the previous year, the event is growing at exceptional speed. To accommodate this growth the show will take not only the entire Grand Hall at London Olympia but also the adjoining West Hall to cater for the larger number of international visitors and exhibitors, more dedicated Country Pavilions including the USA, Canada, China, Israel, Singapore and Japan, inclusion of more conferences such as Hotel, Retail, education and Night Time Economy Security and also the brand new Urban Spaces immersive feature.

The Foreign Engagement team commented, "Working with The Department for International Trade (DIT)'s Defence & Security Organisation (DSO), the Home Office (JSaRC) and The Department for Transport (DfT) – we help our UK exhibitors increase exports by building relationships with overseas buyers, raising awareness of UK industry capabilities, and co-ordinating HM Government support for export opportunities in established and developing markets.

We have seen a growing demand from International buyers over the past 2 years, with government hosted delegations rising from 30 countries to 57 countries in 2017 and increasing to 65 countries in 2018 - representing over £1bn of spending power. Plus, an increase in overseas companies recognising the value of the UK market and its global influence, reflected in our growing number of country pavilions. We are also pleased to have recently secured funding from Visit Britain who recognise our success in bringing international buyers into the UK and aim to further support our growth plans."

International Security Expo will continue to focus on high-end Homeland Security capabilities with exhibiting companies such as L3, NUCTECH, QinetiQ, Rapiscan, Rohde & Schwarz, Hartmann, HERAS, Rosehill Security and Zaun taking centre stage on the show floor, but will also blend more with Commercial Security technologies aimed at Buildings and Facilities, Hotels, Retailer and Night Time Economy buyers, delivering higher ROI for exhibitors from a more extensive buying chain.

Peter Jones, Chief Executive at Nineteen Events, who is overseeing the transition to International Security Expo says, "Our vision is to deliver the largest and most credible global security event. The UK is the right place to host the international security community each year as it has an established security industrial base producing first class solutions which are highly regarded around the world. It is also seen as a world leader in implementing the best solutions to increasing security challenges. International Security Expo is the natural progression for the show brand and strengthens our position in achieving our objectives in the near future.”

Ends

Notes to Editors:

International Security Expo is the premier showcase for Homeland and Commercial security attracting a global audience of government, transport & borders, law enforcement, military, emergency services, CNI, cyber security, facilities managers and the public and private sectors. Through a series of conferences, workshops and interactive features, the event tackles some of the most challenging threats to our citizens, borders and infrastructure.

Put the date in your diary now – 28-29 November 2018, London Olympia. Visit the website at www.internationalsecurityexpo.com for more information.

For Press or Media Enquires contact the marketing team on info@internationalsecurityexpo.com

Protecting Urban Spaces - Press Release – November 2017 – London

Standing Still is not an option

Stand still and in reality, you go backwards. The way technologies are demonstrated to those who need them can't stand still either. We at the UK Security Expo are determined to deliver the best possible experience for all of our visitors, but to do that we need to deliver the best possible options for our conference attendees and of course our exhibitors.

2018 sees us going one step further. We have decided to dedicate a large central area of exhibition floor space to a Protecting Urban Spaces demonstrator. It will have different sections such as bridges, an urban environment and a crowded places environment, all set out to allow companies to demonstrate physical and technological solutions which can help protect them. So, we will see bollards, blocks, street furniture, planters and more, over-watched by CCTV, high throughput screening and of course feeding into a control area.

The feature will act as the home for scenarios for live demonstrations to be played out, giving a real understanding of the technologies that are available all of the time and in response to an incident, in as realistic an environment as can be built in an exhibition.

Design is critical and we will be working with an industry leading architect to get our ambitious project right. Roger Cumming from Fenley Martel will be providing some of the detailed security design advice and said, "I want to ensure as realistic a display as possible but also to show how security should be seen as an enabler, to encourage people to use an urban space and feel safe when doing so."

Engineering the integration is also important and we have Andrew Sieradzki from BuroHappold Engineering ensuring that integration reflects best practice. "This presents a unique opportunity to 'walk through' an urban streetscape that integrates both the physical, technical and operational measures - alongside the architecturally considered form and function. This demonstrator will depict the macro design considerations of a public realm security design at a 'micro' level, allowing visitors to interact with all relevant security measures to really get a practical understanding of their capabilities."

Nicola Greenaway-Fuller, the Managing Director of Nineteen Events who are delivering the UK Security Expo said, "I don't want people to have to visualise integrated solutions, I am excited that we will demonstrate integrated solutions as part of the event. If a picture paints a thousand words, a visual live demonstration, with government agency and expert participation, gives the un-put-down able book on the subject."

A formal Request for Participation (RFP) will be issued early in the New Year and it is anticipated that interest will be very high but if you want to register your interest early then please email Nicola Greenaway-Fuller at ngreenaway@nineteen-events.com

Increasing the pressure

by Philip Ingram MBE

The numbers of terror suspects, numbers of individuals returning from fighting with Daesh or Al Qaeda in Iraq and Syria and numbers of individuals who are an active threat has been widely reported over the past year. Maintaining a database of 20,000 on a watchlist, keeping more than a weather eye on 3000 active terror suspects, maintaining 650 active investigations and knowing buried in your statistics are some 450 returned foreign fighters, this is no mean feat.

With the terrorists only having to be successful once, the pressure on the Security Service and Counter Terror policing community is immense; and what a credit to their work with 2018 not suffering in the same way 2017 did. However, what are already stretched resources have been hit with another priority, further diluting the Counter Terror effort.

That other priority is the need to redirect resources that were taken from Counter Espionage at the end of the Cold War to focus on Counter Terror, back to Counter Espionage to deal with the Russian and other hostile intelligence services operating in the UK, and the trigger for that was the attempted assassination of the former Russian GRU Colonel, Sergei Skripal, in Salisbury in March of this year.

Once again good old-fashioned counter espionage, once the core of MI5 activity, was back on the priority list. Speaking to one MI5 Officer very recently he said that the pressure in dealing with both situations had them "beyond breaking point."

Changing priorities, better use of scarce resources, improving public private partnership, exploiting innovation and technology are all themes at this year's International Security Expo being held on 28th and 29th November at Olympia in London. It is free to attend.

The Designing Out Terrorism conference that follows on from this year's Safer Cities Summit will pull lessons that will hopefully lead to some ideas to ease the pressure on stretched organisations.

An example of one of the potential discussion points between police and mayoral representatives from London, Glasgow, Cardiff, Birmingham, Belfast, Manchester and Salisbury at the Safer Cities Summit will be to understand how in Northern Ireland there has been on average one terror incident every four days since the signing of the Good Friday Agreement, yet we hear very little about it nationally, so how do the PSNI just get on with it? How does business and the community cope with the disruption and how do the PSNI and local authorities work together to minimise disruption?

There must be lessons that can be used to reduce the amount of publicity given to terror incidents in Great Britain and the disruption caused and therefore the pressure on resources. However, Salisbury will have a clear view given the disruption the Novichok incident has caused. An 80% reduction on visitor footfall since March has had a massive impact on the local economy, but what are the implications for a similar incident in London, Birmingham, Manchester or any of our cities?

The International Security Expo, formerly the UK Security Expo, changed its name to reflect what the event is all about and that is bringing an international audience to London to share best practice, get updated on new thinking, processes and technologies and to come together as a community that's sole purpose is to keep us a little bit safer.

Reflecting an element of the International feel, Dr John Coyne from the Australian Strategic Policy Institute (ASPI) who is a renowned global expert in Border security, strategic intelligence, transnational and serious organised crime will be a keynote speaker at the Expo both at Lord West's lunch and in the Aviation and Border Conference.

In one of his recent articles entitled "Weapons of Mass (Economic) Destruction" he says, "The threat of terrorism and weapons of mass destruction remains as real now as when the term was first used in 1937. Today in Australia the greatest potential for harm is the threat of the deliberate use of chemicals or biological materials as weapons particularly in the agricultural sector." This could apply anywhere!

This year's event has built on the phenomenal success we had last year and as mentioned kicks off again with the Safer Cities Summit with the focus this time being on UK cities.

Following the Safer Cities Summit will be the Designing Out Terrorism conference, and this will kick off with a fascinating briefing from Rich Stevens, Deputy Director Global Security (EMEA) with EY looking at the role of security Intelligence in setting the scene for wider security planning. It will tease out some of the processes you should go through to identify risks and threats and put them into mitigation context. It is the old saying, if there is no threat, why have a lock on the door?

Peter Jones the CEO of Nineteen events who deliver the expo has the philosophy of making a difference and as an event organiser the best way he has found to do that is by delivering a platform that highlights innovation, enables the sharing of best practice, allows greater understanding between the public and private sectors and delivers some outstanding networking opportunities.

This personal approach to adding value highlights the importance people are within the wider security arena. However, as we all know dealing with people are the greatest challenge. To try and give a flavour for how to read people a little better, in the Aviation and Borders conference we have a fascinating speaker, Darren Stanton. Darren, an ex-police officer who has worked in prison psychology is now described in the press and on television as The Human Lie Detector.

Darren will give his tips for border staff to look for as they are talking to people as they seek entry into the country. His skills are equally applicable to anyone who has to interact with people. He is not just a body language expert, he looks for what he describes as 'tells' and these are micro indications, they could be body language related, or the way someone puts a sentence together or the way they move when they talk and can interpret when people are telling the truth or are trying to hide something.

Critical to making a difference is looking after the next generation and the Security institute have decided to launch their fantastic 'Next Generation' initiative where a group of 50 secondary school age children, including Volunteer Police Cadets, will receive a guided tour of the show with the aim of demonstrating all the disciplines and diversity that the security sector can offer.

There are 13 different conferences over the 2 days delivering 55 hours of CDP training with over 350 exhibitors displaying and launching over 1000 products and a huge new and completely innovative feature showcasing how to best protect our urban spaces. You can't miss it as it is over 300Sq m in size!!

The exciting new feature will take centre stage at the show, focusing on large scale threats and the protection of people & buildings in the 'public realm'. The area will be split into two scenes; a landscaped plaza to the left and a park setting to the right. Each will provide an open space for live demonstrations and allow visitors to step into the demonstrator to experience a variety of physical security equipment and innovative technologies first hand in real life context.

The demonstrator will showcase the best in permeant and rapidly deployable physical security products and innovative technologies. Over 30 products and technologies will be on display from Perimeter Fencing, Street Furniture, Cycle Rack, Bollards, Street Lighting, High Security Gates, Biometric Technologies, Planters, CCTV, Mass Screening Cameras, Under Vehicle Screening, and Video Analytics.

Alongside the feature will be a Command & Control Room where the feeds from the technologies on the demonstrator including CCTV, Surveillance, Biometrics, Mass Screening, Intrusion Sensors, and Crisis Management apps will be on display on a live video walls and terminals. Visitors to this area will be able to integrate the information and learn about how to use this in the decision-making process when dealing with threat.

In addition, the feature will form the environment for several interactive scenarios, offering a realistic back drop to visitors to the area, where you can experience several demonstrations focusing on:

- How can you protect an urban area from a marauding gun-man attack or suicide bomber?
- How can you prevent a vehicle from being used as a weapon of mass destruction, or identify a terrorist conducting a reconnaissance prior to an attack?
- Protestor management and removal
- Accurate and rapid identification of individuals
- Mass screening for individuals for concealed threat items

There are a number of country pavilions including USA, Canada, India, China, Australia and an EU Pavilion complementing the different zones that include a live demonstration area, our Drone Zone and Government Agency and Department Zone, Cyber, Intelligence and Information Security Zone, LPCB Zone where you can see things being smashed up and so much more.

In addition to the zones there will be at least 50 international delegations attending from all corners of the globe. These are being coordinated through the government Department of International Trade, Defence and Security Organisation (DIT DSO). The international interest shows that the UK is still seen as a source of leading capabilities and products for the security industry but also as the source of best practice processes and procedures.

28th and 29th November, Olympia, London, this year's International Security Expo, co located beside a new International Disaster Response Expo, one ticket 2 events, 13 conferences and networking bar none. Visit <https://ise18-visitor.reg.buzz/crisisresponsejournal> to book your free ticket.

* END*

For Immediate Release

2nd Annual International Crowd Safety Conference Collocated at International Security Expo

[LONDON 02 MARCH 2018] – After a successful launch back in 2016 the 2nd Annual International Crowd Safety Conference (ICSC) will take place alongside International Security Expo (ISEC) 2018 on the 28-29 November at London Olympia.

Run in association with The Square Metre Ltd and Crowd Safety Training, the two day conference will see renowned experts discuss everything from the ever changing landscape of counter-terrorism at events, training developments for crowd safety, the evolution of the crowd safety industry, managing staff and stress in critical incidents, the guest experience update, defence strategies against litigation claims and much more.

Andy Hollinson, CEO of The Square Metre Ltd said: “It’s great to be hosting the 2nd annual conference alongside International Security Expo this year as it gives delegates the chance to also benefit from the educational content and security innovations and services that the broader show has to offer. We have an ongoing commitment to improve crowd safety around the world and the International Crowd Safety Conference provides a perfect platform to discuss the current issues organisations are facing.”

The industry has seen a move away from event organisers only utilising purpose built venues such as stadia or arenas, now events are held on the public roads, greenfield sites and other complexed environments such as shopping centres or public spaces such as town centres. The introduction of legislation also means event organisers and their staff have a number of liabilities as well as a duty of care to their customers. Having enough staff to make an event safe both under the normal conditions and an emergency conditions is important, but how can you ensure that the security staff working at an event will be an effective resource in the event of an emergency?

The Square Metre’s Crowd Management and Security Consultant Robbie Naish comments: “The answer is good robust training that allows security staff to understand an event and how it all works, backed up by good leaders who mentor them throughout the event. ‘Knowledge is Power’ so let’s share it.”

Peter Jones, CEO, International Security Expo continues “The extensive ICSC programme will deliver high-level insight into the key issues for crowd safety and security, alongside practical advice, best practice insight and solutions to the challenges ahead. The conference is an integral part of the offering at International Security Expo and we look forward to continuing the relationship in the future.”

Ends:

Notes for editors:

Crowd Safety Training is a trading style of The Square Metre Ltd, formed in 2014 to address a skills shortage in the Crowd Safety industry and has now developed into a skills training provider across the world with offices in the United Kingdom and Australia. The Square Metre is an industry leader in Apprenticeship training for the security and crowd safety industries.

www.thesquaremetre.com

www.crowdsafetytraining.com

International Security Expo is the premier showcase for Homeland and Commercial security attracting a global audience of government, transport & borders, law enforcement, military, emergency services, CNI, cyber security, facilities managers and the public and private sectors. Through a series of conferences, workshops and interactive features, the event tackles some of the most challenging threats to our citizens, borders and infrastructure.

Put the date in your diary now – 28-29 November 2018, London Olympia. Visit the website at www.internationalsecurityexpo.com for more information.

For Press or Media Enquires contact the marketing team on info@internationalsecurityexpo.com

For immediate release

International Security Expo bring solutions to life with the return of the Drone Zone

[LONDON 12 APRIL 2018] – Due to its successful launch in 2017, the Drone Zone returns to the International Security Expo from 28-29 November at London Olympia once again in partnership with the UK Drone Show – Europe’s largest drone event.

The Drone Zone incorporates a large scenario based flying area showcasing the latest in unmanned aerial vehicles, drone technology and counter drone Solutions. Situated alongside a dedicated drone pavilion where companies will exhibit a broad range of drone capabilities and counter-drone solutions including:

- infra-red camera technology
- thermal imaging
- drone detection
- explosives/substance detection
- training

Leading manufacturers and suppliers will present their high-quality UAV products, explaining how their concepts can enhance security efforts whilst adhering to safety and regulatory requirements. Video feeds and interactive Q&A sessions will ensure visitors are not only immersed in the impressive demonstrations but are also given an opportunity to widen their knowledge of the endless capabilities and solutions available to them.

Visitors will have the unique chance to see live application of the widest range of both drone and counter-drone solutions seen at any other event of this kind, ultimately acquiring a better understanding of how they can be deployed as effective tools for protecting assets, organisations and the public.

Richard Wright, Director, UK Drone Show comments: “We’re really excited about continuing this partnership with International Security Expo. With its global reach of 12,500 visitors, Officially Hosted Country Delegations and multiple Government Departments involved, International Security Expo remains the perfect home for the UK Drone Show.”

Peter Jones, CEO, International Security Expo also comments “Drones are a global phenomenon in terms of the benefits they bring to the security community and also the risks posed when in hostile hands. The Drone Zone provides visitors with a unique platform to view products, solutions and technologies in action, and will be the biggest Fly Zone of its type at an event like this.”

Ends:

Notes for editors:

International Security Expo is the premier showcase for Homeland and Commercial security attracting a global audience of government, transport & borders, law enforcement, military, emergency services, CNI, cyber security, facilities managers and the public and private sectors. Through a series of conferences, workshops and interactive features, the event tackles some of the most challenging threats to our citizens, borders and infrastructure.

Put the date in your diary now – 28-29 November 2018, London Olympia. Visit the website at www.internationalsecurityexpo.com for more information.

For Press or Media Enquires contact the marketing team on info@internationalsecurityexpo.com

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Buro Happold and Farrells announced as partners for the new Protecting Urban Spaces Feature UK Security Expo 2018

Bringing Security to Life

[LONDON 05 FEBRUARY 2018] Consultants BuroHappold Engineering and lead architect Farrells join Former Home Office Engineer, Roger Cumming to deliver the new Protecting Urban Spaces feature at UK Security Expo 2018.

The exciting new feature will take centre stage at the show focusing on large scale threats and the protection of people & buildings in the 'public realm'. The area will be split into two scenarios; a landscaped plaza to the left and a park setting to the right. Each will provide an open space for live demonstrations and allow visitors to step into the demonstrator to experience a variety of physical security equipment first hand in real life context.

Andrew Sieradzki, Director, BuroHappold comments, "Buro Happold are really excited to support the UK Security Expo in this unique opportunity to design and be involved in this free form public realm demonstrator. We will be using our extensive experience of designing safe and secure spaces within the public realm to now immerse exhibition visitors in how we work to ensure an engineered solution is integrated into a well formed architectural public space."

Nigel Bidwell a Partner at Farrells also adds, "In the last two decades there has been a particular focus on the improvement of the public realm in our cities, making them more liveable, walkable and inclusive. The safety of public spaces is critical to their functionality and Farrells are delighted to explore the opportunities for integration of security measures and creating great places for people to enjoy."

Each scenario within the urban spaces feature will have a realistic backdrop with screens showing authentic filmed content, and products set out to allow companies to demonstrate physical and technological solutions which can help protect them. Products displayed will include Perimeter Fencing, Street Furniture, Cycle Rack, Bollards, Street Lighting, Planters, CCTV, Mass Screening Cameras and Video Analytics.

Alongside will be a Command & Control Room where the feeds from the feature ie CCTV and Surveillance will display on a live video wall. The exhibition hall walkways will also be used as 'footpaths' to blend the feature into the surrounding footfall areas of the show.

Demonstrations will include:

- Protection provided to pedestrians from a mixture of threats ie vehicles

- Protection to people from someone or a 'party' of people with hand carried weapons
- Protection of buildings from a blast or 'ramming' event
- Protection to the public from events that lead to crowding

Nicola Greenaway-Fuller, the Managing Director of Nineteen Events who run the UK Security Expo said, "This feature will bring physical security to life and give visitors a real understanding of the technologies that are available all of the time and in particular in response to an incident."

A formal Request for Participation (RFP) will be issued and it is anticipated that interest will be very high. If you want to register your interest in getting involved early then please enter your details at website at <https://www.uksecurityexpo.com/urban-spaces-demonstrator>.

Exciting expose of security career opportunities being shown to Police Cadets and teenagers.

The Security Institute (Syl) has launched its new 'Next Generation' initiative to inspire and attract young people to consider a career within the security industry and, in partnership with the International Security Expo, will roll it out on 28th and 29th November 2018 at Olympia.

We will see a group of 50 13-17year olds, including Volunteer Police Cadets, visit the Expo for a guided tour aimed at demonstrating all of the disciplines and diversity that the security sector can offer, showcase the diversity of career opportunities and, if necessary, change any perceptions about the security industry. The Volunteer Police Cadet programme is currently in over 550 schools and has over 15,700 members.

'Next Generation' has already received extensive industry backing with 50 businesses and organisations stepping up to offer 3-day work experience programmes and lend their support to the initiative alongside Baroness Ruth Henig of Lancaster CBE CSyl, President of the Security Institute.

Rick Mounfield CSyP FSyl, Chief Executive of the Security Institute said, "The security profession is one of the most 'job secure' lines of employment on offer to young people today, but unfortunately the perception of security is poor, often fixated on the image of a security officer in a retail setting. The reality is very different. Our industry offers a range of rewarding career paths beyond simple security guarding, it is a professional career of choice with a clear pathway to leadership."

Paul Barnard MSyl, Director of the Security Institute and of Ward Security, who has been a driving force behind the initiative, said, "There is a real need for the security industry to address the reasons why we are not attracting bright young people and to change perceptions that it does offer both an interesting and life long career choice."

"Having had a successful career both in the Metropolitan Police and now in the security industry I know first-hand how rewarding it can be as well as the importance of the convergence of the security industry with the national security strategy. The security industry is crucial for the ongoing defence and security of our nation and it is important we take action now to address the recruitment issues and to attract the calibre of people we need to help us protect our society over the long term."

Peter Jones, CEO of nineteen group who deliver the International Security Expo, said, "One of the objectives of the show is to put something back and what better way than working with the Security Institute highlighting the amazing opportunities there are for worthwhile, fulfilling and exciting careers across all aspects of security from man-guarding, to running your own security organisation to leading a police force or a security agency and knowing that your career is all about keeping our families and friends safer. Anything we can do to support and help the 'Next Generation' is important and we are pleased to partner with the Security Institute to do just that."

For more information on the 'Next Generation' initiative please visit the Security Institute website here: <https://security-institute.org> And to register to attend the International Security Expo for free please visit its site here: <https://www.internationalsecurityexpo.com>

International Security Expo leads on from European Cyber Security Month

It is the European Cyber Security Month (ECSM) throughout October and as part of the International Security Expo's contribution you need to know what cyber themes we have running through this event in London at Olympia on 28th and 29th November 2018. Its free to attend and packed with content.

ECSM is an awareness campaign that promotes cyber security among EU citizens and advocates seeking to change the perception of cyber-threats by promoting education, good practice and promoting competitions in data and information security.

The International Security Expo is a content driven event aimed at promoting innovation, education and good practice. The free to attend Cyber, Data and Information Security conference, sponsored by Darktrace, takes place on 29th September and complements the innovation on display from Darktrace and others in the dedicated Cyber Zone.

The UK's National Cyber Security Centre (NCSC) part of GCHQ said of the threat' "Today, the UK and its allies can expose a campaign by the GRU, the Russian military intelligence service, of indiscriminate and reckless cyber-attacks targeting political institutions, businesses, media and sport."

The UK's Foreign Secretary Jeremy Hunt said, "These cyber-attacks serve no legitimate national security interest, instead impacting the ability of people around the world to go about their daily lives free from interference, and even their ability to enjoy sport."

With nation states attacking Critical National Infrastructure (CNI), businesses and citizens, Facebook losing millions of users' data and cyber-attacks being reported in the press almost daily, Cyber Security is a central theme that runs throughout the event.

The Cyber Conference alone has the amazing Nicola Whiting from Titania talking about 'Nightmare on Cyber Hygiene Street,' Rowena Fell from EY drilling into the 'Insider Threat' and when it all goes wrong the country's leading QC who will either prosecute you or defend you, Dean Armstrong QC, drills into the real risks and how they can bite.

Outside the Cyber Conference, Pen Test Partners show 'How to Hack the Sea Lanes,' in the Maritime Conference, in Aviation, Vasco Amador from Global Intelligence Insight delves into Social Network Analysis when looking at the online terrorist threat and Brian Lord, a former Deputy Director with GCHQ looks at the threat to our CNI in the CNI conference.

These are merely a flavour and there are cyber nuggets in every conference. The best way to find what you want is to visit www.internationalsecurityexpo.com and look up the conferences but the only way to participate is to be there so click on the 'Register Free' button, because it is all free!. 28 – 29 November 2018 London Olympia, evolving security through innovation, uniting government and industry, you can't get better than that.

 End**

YUDU powers HQ: The Home of Global Security Guides

The International Security Expo are pleased to announce their cooperation with the Digital Publisher YUDU. YUDU is a content delivery and communication software firm with over 10 years of experience in building apps and platforms for major clients such as the United Nations and General Electric or for professional services firms such as KPMG and Slaughter and May.

YUDU's flagship product is YUDU Sentinel, a leading crisis management platform employed by firms of all shapes and sizes. YUDU are publishing a series of Guides for the International Security Expo's free online magazine, HQ: The Home of Global Security which provides a fortnightly comprehensive insight to the latest security headlines, to business opportunities and insights from Security leaders as well as a regular guide on subjects ranging from GDPR to terror preparedness.

Richard Stephenson, CEO of YUDU said, "YUDU are excited to be supporting the International Security Expo's outputs with HQ: The Home of Global Security magazine. The guides we are providing give very real insight and advice for a number of areas and highlight the very real capability we have with YUDU Sentinel to ensure the documentation businesses and other need in a time of crisis it always there. We are very much looking forward to more mobile friendly guides being published showing the usability of our digital publishing technology."

Peter Jones, CEO of the award winning nineteen group who deliver the International Security Expo said, "The International Security Expo is all about adding value to the global security industry and a critical part of that is informing, stimulating debate, sharing best practice and highlighting opportunities. Our online magazine HQ: The Home of Global Security does that and more. Our cooperation with YUDU allows us to deliver our high quality and informative guides in a very user-friendly way as well as demonstrating the utility of YUDU Sentinel, a great capability for business and crisis documentation."

HQ: The Home of Global Security magazine is free. Regular features include our blog, business opportunities and tenders of interest to security suppliers, an Ask the Expert feature as well as our YUDU powered guides and much more.

The International Security Expo is at Olympia in London on 28 and 29 November 2018 and will see over 12,500 Security professionals from over 50 different countries visiting to listen to 12 free-to-attend conferences over the 2 days delivering insight, analysis, best practice and new perspectives on the challenges faced within the industry today. Registration is free, and this is one event not to miss!